

Artist statement:

As an artist living this bizarre time of human history, humans as a group should be more connected with each other than ever. However, it feels like we are still divided from each other. Is this normal? These new technologies push us together harder and harder, but the irrational hate, misunderstanding, and lack of kindness for each other still stand between us. Has society fallen ill? If so, who will cure this illness?

Thousands of years ago, one of the founding fathers of human thinking, Socrates, claimed while on trial that a “daimonion,” a “divine something” from his heart, speaks to him, leading him to do whatever he does. He leaves this idea to us as a message, telling us to listen to the goodness from our heart.

Maybe society is nothing but a single human being.

To cure this illness, society needs to listen to its “daimonion,” its inner voices. Only those voices of the society will awaken the society and end this bizarre time of human history.
